The previously abandoned eighties office building at the Casuariestraat in The Hague has been given a new life and the renovation has attracted new tenants. An important part of this facelift is the realized second skin of the building. This glass façade gives the building - in all its simplicity a - totally new expression. The change in the tilt of the panels creates varied reflection patterns of the air and the surroundings. This results in a playful and modern appearance.

Special about this renovation project is the very fast process; from the preliminary design towards completion within three months time.
